

ABSTRACT

A semiconductor chip includes a substrate having a main surface, the main surface including a flame-shaped first area, which is along sides of the main surface, and a second area encompassed by the first area, a pad formed in the first area and a bump electrode formed on the pad, and at least one supporting member formed in the second area.